

Need more living space for the kids?

If your family wants multiple living zones and a formal dining room, then Oakford Homes' Endeavour is the design for you

Looking to upgrade, maybe knock down your old home and start again? Well, if you have a traditional block at least 19m wide, you could build a new home, such as Oakford Homes' Endeavour.

This attractive 16.07m-wide single-storey home offers four bedrooms, three living zones, 2.5 bathrooms plus there's an alfresco out back, under the main roof, that comes as a standard feature.

This is a design that will suit families with children – young through to adult kids – as the sheer number of separate living areas will give everyone space to spread out and chill.

At the heart of the Endeavour is a combined kitchen/casual dining/family living area that leads out to a 4.2m x 6.98m alfresco.

There's two further living areas, a lounge at the front and a home theatre/rumpus which can be closed off so noise won't travel beyond the space you are in. But as well as these living zones, there's a fourth space, presented as a formal dining room. This is a rare find these days, but one many of us will still love to have for special occasions or when the whole family has a night in together.

The master bedroom has its own ensuite and walk-in robe, while three other bedrooms are in a secondary hallway off the open plan.

Two bedrooms are side-by-side, ideal for little kids, while the third is at the opposite end and would give an older child the privacy they crave. All will share the three-way bathroom, set out for efficiency in the mornings, but the added bonus of a third toilet/powder room off the hall is there if anyone needs it.

Other pluses of this design is the walk-in pantry with shelving behind the kitchen and the internal access from the garage.
